

What Constitutes Safety in Banking

There are various factors which contribute to the safety of a bank.

It is thought by some that if a bank has a very large surplus in proportion to its capital it is in the best of condition. This is not necessarily true.

Both the capital and the surplus stand for the protection of deposits. It is, therefore, the relative size of capital and surplus combined to the total amount of deposits that shows the strength of a

It is considered by many that if the combined capital and surplus of a bank is equal to 10% of the deposits there is ample protection. We wish to call particular attention to the fact that the combined capital and surplus of the Union Trust Company is equal to nearly 100% of the bank's deposits—thus affording the most complete pro-tection that can be desired for our depositors.

Improvements Planned.

ALEXANDRIA, Va., August 17, 1912. Members of the police department who hereafter arrest persons for violating the speed laws must have some actual figures on which to base their charge, otherwise they cannot secure a conviction. The foregoing is the essence of a statement made by Police Justice Caton in court today to Policeman Scott, who had Lawrence Toombs arraigned for an alleged violation of the speed law.

According to the testimony of the policeman, shortly after 10 o'clock last night he saw a machine driven by Toombs on upper King street and believed it was exceeding the speed limit. The officer was of the opinion the auto was being operated at the rate of about twenty miles an hour. Justice Caton dismissed the case and added that a conviction on a mere estimation is entirely too uncertain. This city will, therefore, eventually have bicycle policemen to look after the speed violators, with speedometers on their machines.

There is already an ordinance before the city council for such addition to force, although no action has as yet been taken on the matter and it continues to sleep in the hands of the committee to which it was referred.

League of Municipalities to Meet. Arrangemetns are being made for the annual meeting of the League of Virginia Municipalities, which will be held in this city September 17-18 next. It is expected there will be a large gathering here of mayors and other city officials from various sections of the state at that time. A. D. Brockett of his city, president of the league, has sent out invitations to the mayors of all cities and towns in the state to attend. The objects of the league are: First, to promote systematic collection of information relating to municipal affairs; second, to foster the exchange of suggestions between municipaliles on matters of municipal interest; third, to propose and, so far as possible, influence legislation necessary to proper municipal administracion and growth; fourth, generally to interest to bring municipalities of Virginia abreast of the municipalities of the country. The local members of the association are planning for the entertainment of the visitors. The meeting of the association last year was held at Cape Charles, Va.
